RESIDENTIAL/COMMERCIAL INSTALLS & SERVICE

How do you know if you need a new air conditioner? There are several ways to tell if your air conditioner needs to be replaced. Our technicians will be able to tell you right away if they notice something wrong during their inspection, and whether or not they recommend installing a brand-new system or if you should repair your existing one.

If your system is 10 years old or older, chances are that it is using much more power than newer models. A new air conditioning system can reduce your electricity bill and save you money. Another way to tell if your home needs a new air conditioner installed is if you notice strange sounds or smells coming from your air conditioner or vents. If these sounds and smells persist, reach out to us as soon as possible.

The most common cause of a leaking air conditioner is frozen evaporator coils. A dirty air conditioning filter can cause your coils to freeze, even during hot summer months.

Another cause of a leaking air conditioner is a full or cracked drain pan. Changing your filters monthly is recommended in addition to two system check ups a year to help prevent all types of A/C repair.
